

Segmentation of ultrasound images

Precise segmentations of anatomical objects (such as atherosclerotic plaques) in a sequence of ultrasonic B-mode images allow the computation of various biomechanical or tissue properties that may be useful to clinicians as a diagnostic tool. Under this point of view, segmentation algorithms of a region-of-interest through a sequence of ultrasound images are developed at LBMU.