

Mechanical and acoustical characterization of tissues and organs

Various ultrasound imaging techniques are developed at LBMU based on quantitative measurements for tissue characterization, with the goal of developing complementary tools that may be useful to clinicians for diagnosis and follow-up of various diseases, including atherosclerotic plaques, venous thrombus, breast lesions and rheological disorders.